

Ali Farka Touré with Ry Cooder - Talking Timbuktu (1994)

Written by bluesever

Sunday, 15 January 2012 19:57 - Last Updated Wednesday, 28 August 2013 16:57

Ali Farka Touré with Ry Cooder - Talking Timbuktu (1994)

01. Bonde – 5:28 02. Soukora – 6:05 03. Gomni – 7:00 04. Sega – 3:10 play
05. Amandrai – 9:22 06. Lasidan – 6:06 07. Keito – 5:42 08. Banga – 2:32
play
09. Ai Du – 7:09 10. Diaraby – 7:25

Personnel: Clarence "Gatemouth" Brown - Guitar (Electric), Viola Ry Cooder - Cumbus, Guitar, Guitar (Bass), Guitar (Electric), Guitar (Steel), Mandolin, Marimba, Sampling, Tamboura, Vocals Jim Keltner - Drums John Patitucci - Bass, Bass (Acoustic), Guitar (Bass) Hamma Sankare - Calabash, Choir, Chorus, Percussion, Vocals Ali Farka Touré - Arranger, Banjo, Guitar (Acoustic), Guitar (Electric), Percussion, Six String Banjo, Vocals Oumar Toure - Bongos, Choir, Chorus, Conga, Vocals

Guitarist Ali Farka Touré has repeatedly bridged the gap between traditional African and contemporary American vernacular music, and this release continues that tradition. The CD features him singing in 11 languages and playing acoustic and electric guitar, six-string banjo, njarka, and percussion, while teaming smartly with an all-star cast that includes superstar fusion bassist John Patitucci, session drummer Jim Keltner, longtime roots music great Ry Cooder (who doubled as producer), venerable guitarist Gatemouth Brown, and such African percussionists and musicians as Hamma Sankare on calabash and Oumar Touré on congas. ---Ron Wynn, allmusic.com

Talking Timbuktu is a groundbreaking record that vividly illustrates the Africa-Blues connection in real time. Ali Farka Toure, one of Mali's leading singer-guitarists, has a trance-like, bluesy style that, although deeply rooted in Malian tradition, bears astonishing similarity to that of John Lee Hooker or even Canned Heat. It's a mono-chordal vamp, with repetitive song lines cut with

Ali Farka Touré with Ry Cooder - Talking Timbuktu (1994)

Written by bluesever

Sunday, 15 January 2012 19:57 - Last Updated Wednesday, 28 August 2013 16:57

shards of blistering solo runs that shimmer like a desert mirage. Toure may be conversant with some blues artists, but it is unlikely that artists like Hooker or Robert Pete Williams ever heard these Malian roots, which makes the connection so uncanny. Ry Cooder, well versed in domestic and world guitar styles, is the perfect counterpoint in these extended songs/jams, his sinewy slide guitar intertwining with his partner's in a super world summit without barriers or borders. ---Derek Rath, Editorial Reviews download: uploaded anonfiles mega 4shared mixturecloud yandex mediafire download

back