I began writing this album back in early 2018. At the time, I was working and writing out of my small, dark bedroom studio in my Chicago apartment. The project was born out of a desire to get out of that claustrophobic space and to go out into the wilderness and explore. To escape from everyday distractions and stresses and to be in a place of calm. I wanted to create music that got me out of that space and hopefully inspires others to do the same. I was inspired early on by the beautiful imagery of the vast wilderness in the Pacific Northwest. I wondered what the dense, lush forests, flowing rivers, and immense mountains would sound like musically. And so, I composed 10 pieces to reflect what I felt that would sound like, a sound track for exploring the wilderness. I traveled with cinematographer and photographer Grant Boutiette to the Olympic Peninsula in Washington State where we spent 5 days filming and photographing the wilderness. With that footage, editor Andre De Matheu and I have created 3 videos each featuring a track from the album. I've also compiled a collection of photographs from the trip that, along with the videos and most importantly, the music, I hope inspires you to go out, explore, and discover. ---philipganderson.com
