Purcell: Dido and Aeneas / Act 3 - "With drooping wings" 4:54 Anne Sofie von Otter (Mezzo Soprano) Kym Amps (Soprano) Stephen Varcoe (Baritone) Lynne Dawson (Soprano) Nigel Rogers (Tenor) Sarah Leonard (Soprano), Elisabeth Priday (Soprano) Carol Hall (Soprano) English Concert, English Concert Choir Trevor Pinnock - conductor

Trevor Pinnock's Dido, the most glamorously cast of the period-instrument recordings, was the first to offer a version following 17th-century casting and theatrical conventions. Anne-Sofie Von Otter, always a superb artist, is a regal, moving Dido--her singing is almost too "operatic," but rarely crosses over into excess. Lynne Dawson is a spectacular Belinda, gracefully tossing off her airs at high velocity and combining youthful giddiness with enough maturity to be a credible confidante. Steven Varcoe's light baritone makes Aeneas seem more tender lover than burly soldier, but he sings beautifully. In Purcell's era, men often played witches or old women: here Nigel Rogers sings the Sorceress with plenty of verve and a minimum of camp. ---Matthew Westphal, amazon.com
