Erik Truffaz has covered a lot of ground - both literally and metaphorically – since releasing his first album on the Blue Note label in 1997. Over the course of a single decade -and after selling a total of 400,000 albums – the trumpeter’s life has been a blur of planes, trains and automobiles transporting him from concert to concert on his never-ending world tours. This naturally led him to new artistic landscapes and fruitful encounters.

The Erik Truffaz Quartet is above all a collective, a sound, a group dynamic. Starting in 1997 the group was Marcello Giuliani on bass, Marc Erbetta on drums, and Patrick Muller on keyboards for a seminal album, "Out of a Dream", on the legendary Blue Note label. In June 2010, Benoît Corboz takes Patrick Muller's place, after having been the studio sound engineer for the group, starting with "The Dawn". A new tribute to slow, the group takes on silence and stretching things out. Sophie Hunger, with her marvellous voice, is invited to join the quartet on two tracks (a Dylan cover and an original composition). Marcello Giuliani brings his double bass back and records a track on banjo, and the group is off again for more great adventures.

Pod koniec października ukazała się nowa płyta francuskiego wirtuoza trąbki Erika Truffaza pt. "In Between". Erik po latach powrócił do składu swojego starego kwartetu sprzed 2007r. z Benoît Corbozem na instrumentach klawiszowych. Nowy album zawiera 10 utworów, które jak sam tytuł sugeruje wypełniają przestrzeń gdzieś "pomiędzy przeszłością i przyszłością, radością i smutkiem, życiem i śmiercią". Obok nagrań instrumentalnych na "In Between" znalazły się też dwie piosenki śpiewane przez Sophie Hunger ("Let Me Go" oraz cover utworu B.Dylana "Dirge").
