

Kris Davis – Massive Threads (2013)

Written by bluesever
Sunday, 30 March 2014 15:56 -

Kris Davis – Massive Threads (2013)

1. Ten Exorcists 2. Desolation and Despair 3. Intermission Music 4. Massive Threads 5. Dancing Marlins 6. Evidence 7. Leaf-Like 8. Slow Growing Kris Davis – piano

The first five minutes of "Ten Exorcists," the opening track of Massive Threads by pianist Kris Davis, consists of minimalist repetitive percussive playing of her prepared piano. The Steve Reich-like repetition mimics percussive tape-loops that cease, but the momentum endures and lays the foundation for her solo.

This solo outing benefits from Davis' classically trained ear, the follow-up to her first solo attempt Aerial Piano (Clean Feed, 2011). Her background has earned her praise, writing for jazz ensembles led by Ingrid Laubrock and Tony Malaby, and for her piano trio and a collaborative unit Paradoxical Frog.

The title track, originally written for six pianists, opens with Davis overdubbing just one additional track over her playing. The eleven-minute piece begins as a dance, then thickens with gargantuan chords that rumble with a (not-distant) thunder. The heaviness of the storm gives way to a music box sound of simplicity played under clearing skies.

Davis' ability to link modern composers with jazz makes her music challenging and ultimately interesting. She melds Iannis Xenakis' abstractions with Keith Jarrett's expression. Her use of rhythmic timing—as on "Dancing Marlins" and "Leaf Like"—levitates the spirit, while the introspective "Slow Growing" exhibits a meditative maturity to her playing.

Kris Davis – Massive Threads (2013)

Written by bluesever

Sunday, 30 March 2014 15:56 -

Her take on Thelonious Monk's "Evidence," the only cover on the recording, eschews the surprise of Monk for a sort of hallucinogenic effect. The dream-like state summoned suggests the near catatonic state the great man was imprisoned in, at his life's end. It is easy to imagine Monk recalling this tune from the foggy state of his final days. ---Mark Corroto, allaboutjazz.com download: uploaded yandex 4shared mediafire solidfiles mega filecloudio nornar ziddu

back