12. Distance And Time
13. How It Feels To Fly
14. Empire State Of Mind (Part II)

According to Alicia Keys, who was battling depression following the loss of a family member, her fourth album was a struggle to conceive. But, as befits the thrust of her songwriting, she overcame adversity to make a confident, well-crafted modern soul record that engages and rewards without doing anything groundbreaking. Almost every track deals with the ups and downs of love and proceeds at a stately pace. The restraint works powerfully on "Try Sleeping With a Broken Heart", but the punchier moments towards the end – the Beyoncé duet and a return to Jay-Z's exuberant "Empire State of Mind" – come as something of a relief. ---Kilian Fox, guardian.co.uk
