Britney Spears fans are gearing up for the release of the singer's new music in 2013. Details are slowly emerging about the music and what it was like to work with Spears on the follow-up to "fem-me fa tale".

"Right now her peeps are preparing for Britney's upcoming album, which will be released in Fall 2013. Some other things too, but the main focus is the album," American producer Jeff Dandurand (Jey Jey Star) said in a recent radio interview. "She has a process she goes through when these initial stages for a new album begin. I've seen cats (producers) craft something brand new or take in beats from two years ago and Britney creates Gold with it.

Dandurand, who is also known as comedian Jey Jey Star has contributed music for Spears before. Jeff along with the late Christopher "Notes" Olsen penned the much sought after unreleased track "Rebellion", which was recorded but omitted for the 'Blackout' album.

"[Britney]'always has her fans in mind first and wants only her best represented," Dandurand said. "I will say that people's speculation behind the unreleased songs meaning is not far off. Notes (referring the late producer) was a genius. He heard some basic arrangement i was messing with and literally splashed magic on it. Britney came up with the lyrics based on a personal poem she had been working on for a couple weeks leading up to our recording session. The original demo is still in my archives but because of Notes passing and my loyalty for Spears, I will not leak it until both camps feel its ready for public consumption."

When asked over the holiday break by her fans if she'll be releasing her eighth studio album, Spears, 31, replied in a series of responses, reading: "Really focused on my music right now. … Collaborating with some new inspiring producers. … Working hard." --- paparazzidaily.com
