The second volume of Chicago/ The blues yesterday brings to your attention two little known blues artists plus the early works of the great bluesman Eddie Campbell who has recorded such masterpieces album like King of the Jungle (certainly one of the best LP to come out from Chicago in the 70's), Let's pick it or his recent Delmark effort Spider eating preacher.

I've had the great pleasure to meet several times Eddie when he was living in Europe, touring with the very good French blues band of Tao Ravao featuring harmonica ace Vincent Bucher. A great gentleman and a fantastic showman, Eddie was also very friendly and willing to share recollections of his musical career, drawing striking sketches of the Chicago blues scene. The three singles he did for the tiny Hawaii label in the late 60's are very hard to find and have (to my knowledge) never been reissued anywhere in any form. One of this 45 feature Eddie with the mysterious singer Yvonne Gomez.

Little Wolf (born Jesse Sanders 26 June 1930 in Florence, Ms) was altogether a Chicago police officer for 47 years while singing the blues in the Windy City clubs. Married to Howlin' Wolf's niece Diane, Jesse brought the attention of Willie Dixon who was trying to find new talents for his fledgling Yambo label. Rebaptized by Dixon Little Wolf, Jesse recorded the modest hit but striking blues The wolf won't howl no more after Howlin' Wolf's death. This single was then featured on a whole album that I bought directly at Willie Dixon's small Chicago office. I don't think this fairly good album (featuring such luminaries as Buster Benton, Johnny B. Moore and Billy Branch) has ever been distributed outside Chicago. It has been said that Jesse made also another album for Bobby Rush which is very hard to find (thanks to Pierre Monnery who located one copy of this!). After his retirement from the Chicago Police Department, Jesse Sanders relocated in Memphis where he made some public appearances. It is not known if he is still alive.

Little Larry Hudson is an almost complete unknown. A singer and guitarist, he seems to hail from Des Moines, Iowa where in the late 60's he recorded a single for the very short-lived Success label. A few years later, he was performing in Chicago (generally with the L.C. Roby band) and waxed another 45 in a much more Soul-oriented style. ---Gérard Herzhaft, jukegh.blogspot.com
