Big bands dominated American music throughout much of the early and mid-twentieth century. They played jazz, swing, and the popular tunes of the day, appearing on stage, on the radio, and in films. Their leaders often became celebrities, and these bands frequently fostered and introduced to the world some of our most beloved entertainers. Whiteman, Armstrong, Goodman, Miller, Dorsey, Shaw, and James are the hallmarks of big band music. They are the best of the best from an era that featured many amazing musicians, and listening to their recordings is an excellent way to familiarize yourself with this musical genre.
