She first rose to fame in 2007, when her debut single "Whine Up" became one of the most played songs on pop radio that summer. The song achieved major success worldwide, reaching the top ten in countries such as Belgium and France. The single also became a modest hit in the US, peaking inside the top forty of the Hot 100 single chart, as well as topping the Hot Dance Club Play chart. The single led to the release of DeLuna's debut album, 9 Lives in the Fall of 2007. The album had a generally positive critical reception, as well as some commercial success. The album debuted at number 58 in the US, and charted within the top twenty of countries such as Belgium and Poland. The album's success led to a re-release the following year.

In 2008 DeLuna began work on her second studio album. The album spawned several official and promotional singles. The first of these was "Unstoppable", which became a minor hit in Canada. The song was featured in the film Confessions of a Shopaholic, and on its soundtrack CD. It was followed by the second promotional single "Dance Bailalo", which became a major hit on the US Hot Dance Club Play chart. DeLuna's second album, titled Inside Out, spawned the singles "Push Push", "Party O'Clock", and "Dancing Tonight". After much delay, Inside Out was released in Belgium on November 5, 2010. The album reached the top twenty of the Belgium album chart, and is currently unreleased in any other country.
